

Please do not preempt Indiana's Telephone Privacy laws in favor of adopting one lower national standard. Prior to Indiana's law change, I was receiving anywhere from one to five calls a night, usually at dinner time. None of the calls were of interest to me and was a waste of my time. I used to politely listen to the other party and would have to tell them that I wasn't interested in their product or service at least three times before ending the call. It got to the point where I wouldn't answer the telephone. Since Indiana changed its law, I haven't had one call. My time at home is much more enjoyable. If I want a product or service, I can call myself.
